

South China Morning Post

A1: Arts hub overhaul after death of reveller

---

Admission procedures and security checks for events at the West Kowloon arts hub will be reviewed to ensure organisers learn the right lessons after one fan died and three others were admitted to hospital during an electronic music festival on Saturday, the cultural district chief has pledged.

CEO of the West Kowloon Cultural District Authority Duncan Pescod promised an investigation on Tuesday as the Post learned that the three victims admitted to hospital had tested positive for controlled drugs, which could either be party or prescribed pills.

The four victims – all Hongkongers – fell sick at different times, from 3.35pm to 11.41pm, during the festival called Road to Ultra held on the grass pitch in the Nursery Park area of the district on Saturday. Investigations showed they had not carried with them illegal drugs, according to police.

C1: Waste exporters resume collections

---

A trade group of Hong Kong exporters has called off its stoppage of waste paper collection after just three days of industrial action.

Jacky Lau Yiu-shing, director of the Recycle Materials and Re-production Business General Association, said the group had made its point, and collections would gradually resume on Monday.

The stoppage, which began on Friday, was initially planned to last for at least a week. The group called on the local government to help lobby Chinese officials to fix an issue involving exporting waste from the city to mainland China for processing.

“Many firms have let their staff go on leave because of the stoppage, so a full resumption will not happen until Tuesday. But we acknowledge that the government has been working hard ... and is grasping the seriousness [of the matter],” Lau said.